"Chicago's most useful citizen" the title earned by Miss Jane Addams, founder of Hull House and noted social worker, who reaches today. Born in a little Illinois own and educated at Rockford college, Miss Addams' early ambition was to follow a medical career, but a physical ailment obliged her to abandon her purpose, and from her own affliction she turned to seek suffering in others. It was in 1889 that she decided to try the experiment of a social settlement on a small scale. The result was the establishment of what afterward became known as Hull House, situsted in the most cosmopolitan quarter of Chicago. The first activity of the settlement was directed to caring for the children of the vicinity. In a short space the time the institution became the best known of its kind in the world.
With her growing fame other calls have been made upon Miss Adams' time and attention, but she has never been diverted from her first purpose—the manufacture of worthy citizens out of material often refractory and stubborn.
